

The no-call list should be left as is. It works. If I discontinued a bank service there was likely a reason. I do not want calls for 18 months trying to get me back. Mail me something, but do not disturb me with an evening phone call. How would the 18 month system be enforced? Did they call at 17 months or was it 19 months? What a mess. It is bad enough as it is with all of the calls from political groups and charitable groups. Leave the system alone. The calls that are allowed are annoying, but it is far better than it was when we constantly got new credit card calls, siding and window calls, roofing calls, time-share offers, etc., etc. It works. If it ain't broke, don't fix it.
